
Ah, accounting. Is there any word more terrifying to a creative field-goer than “accounting”? Some people say it’s because we fear the numbers and all the math that goes with it. Others say we just hate anything that has to do with money and responsibility. It could be both! Who knows? Who doesn't dread the idea of doing their taxes or reconciling bank statements? And yet, these tasks are unavoidably necessary for any business owner or freelancer looking to save money on paying an accountant, not to mention making sure they are staying in compliance with local laws. But if we’re going to be doing all that anyway, why not try and do it on our own? What we need is a basic understanding of how business and personal finances work and of the most common (and most helpful) tools like spreadsheets, financial statements of various sorts and of course, tax forms.
